Dear Friends,

While winter maintains its hold, this issue of ParkWays will usher you into the spring season with all of the color, sound and vibrancy that accompanies the emergence of plant and animal life.

Here at MetroParks, spring signals not only the start of a new program schedule, but also the ramp up to another busy season of park management and enhancement. As is probably the case in most park agencies, it is the high-profile new programs, events or projects that seem to capture most of the public attention and comment. But I want to talk to you briefly about an agency initiative that MetroParks is committed to undertaking over the next few years involving a staple group of MetroParks’ facilities: hiking trails.

Since the inception of MetroParks 47 years ago, hiking trails have served many a guest with an introduction to our local natural environment. The ability to immerse visitors deep into the plant and animal diversity of our parks is truly a connection to nature in its simplest yet most personal and powerful form. Utilization doesn’t require training and enjoyment is what you make it. Outcomes range from peaceful solitude and observation to vigorous exercise of the body. So it is imperative that these foundational facilities of MetroParks be the best they can.

As in other constructed facilities, with trails it becomes necessary to make sure they are functioning as desired, meeting the needs of the park user and delivering the ultimate experience in support of the agency mission. Another really important aspect of this undertaking is making certain the MetroParks’ staff, who are responsible for and interact with these facilities on a daily basis, are empowered with a leadership role in order to guarantee success. So MetroParks’ staff from our Park Services, Conservation, Education and Recreation departments have been going through extensive training that will assist them in the trail inventory, peer evaluation and design as well as implementing required physical changes to the multitude of trails throughout our agency. When I mentioned up front that this will be an evolutionary improvement process over the next few years, please keep in mind that we are talking about miles of trail where a lot of the work is very labor-intensive from layout through the construction phase. I think it is clear to the staff involved that while some trail is working, some is not and needs to be dealt with. Coming to this conclusion is not an indictment on past efforts but merely a recognition that design and construction approaches do evolve for the better and cannot be ignored. Therefore, MetroParks will embark on this facelift for hiking trails to open new views, better orient and match the user to expectation, ensure protection of critical natural systems and enhance educational value to our outdoor classrooms. While this endeavor may not be as visibly apparent as some of our high-profile projects of the past, let me assure you there is no project we can undertake for the future of this park system with greater impact potential.

Talk with you in June.

PRODUCE POWER

GWYN VOLUNTEER FORTIFIES HIS VILLAGE WITH VEGETABLES

For Dennis Marsh, the benefits of being the volunteer coordinator for the Founders Community Gardens reach beyond simply encouraging friends and neighbors to be more healthy and self-sufficient. For Marsh, it’s downright therapeutic. “When I’m working with the soil, I feel like I’m being healed,” the Dayton resident says. “I believe this is what the creator intended for us—growing our own food and putting just the goodness that comes out of the Earth into our bodies.”

Marsh is part of Five Rivers MetroParks’ community gardening program called Grow With Your Neighbors (GWYN). Since 1986, GWYN has been helping low- to moderate-income residents in Montgomery County develop and maintain community gardens and green projects, transforming vacant lots into productive open spaces. “Community gardeners cultivate vegetable gardens, care for community-managed parks and beautify their neighborhoods with flowers and trees,” says MetroParks GWYN Manager Luci Beachdell. “The gardens are owned, managed and maintained by neighborhood residents, providing many benefits, such as reduced crime rates, improved mental and physical health, and a greater sense of community.”

GWYN provides many forms of ongoing support to groups who want to start a community garden. It also provides land acquisition assistance, leadership development, community organization, soil amendments and tillng, community building events, training and consulting, seeds and plants, educational materials and workshops. “Plot size and (seasonal) rental fee vary by garden, as do opening and closing dates,” says Beachdell. “The majority of the gardens charge a small plot rental fee for the growing season, about $5 to $15. This fee typically covers the cost of the water bill. All of the older gardens and many of the newer ones have running water on site.”

Marsh’s goal for the Founders plot is to make his gardeners more self-sufficient. “I want this to be a sustainable garden, a place where the community can grow food for themselves and maybe even sell their produce for extra income,” he says. “We also help improve our community by donating food grown here.” Last year, Marsh’s group gave away garden-fresh vegetables to the Dayton Urban Ministry Center and plans to include the Founders Family Community Center food pantry in next year’s crop donation.

Donating food to charitable organizations isn’t the only way Marsh says the GWYN program is helping to heal urban communities in Dayton. “It’s a place to socialize, it’s a kind of neighborhood watch, it teaches people to be self-sufficient, it brings people together,” he explains. “When you invest time and love into something, you care about it. These gardens are a source of pride.”

Marsh also believes in the power of produce. “It’s amazing, all the health benefits that come from these plants,” he says. “Obesity, vitamin deficiency—there are lots of common illnesses that we can treat just by putting good food in our bodies. We don’t need to depend on these big companies to do for us what we can do for ourselves. It’s a good economical decision, and everyone could benefit from saving a little money.”

Teaching people to be self-reliant is empowering for participants, as Beachdell can demonstrate. “I worked with a number of elderly gardeners at Village Park Apartments in Huber Heights. We built several ‘lasagna’ raised beds. The residents were so delighted to be growing food that they moved out of the lasagna beds and into the perennial landscaping beds,” she says. “One of the gardeners, whose next-door neighbor was confined to her apartment, put a tomato plant right outside the neighbor’s window so she could look at it from her apartment.”

New gardeners are welcome to participate in GWYN. Marsh says he is often surprised by newcomers to the Founders plot who say they have never gardened before. “We give them all the tools and instruction they need, and then by the end of summer, they’re carrying out basket after basket of vegetables. I find it very hard to believe some of them are first-timers.”

But gardeners should exercise caution; Marsh warns of the potential addiction to gardening. “It’s like paradise here. Once I start gardening, I don’t ever want to leave. I guess I know I have a problem when I even dream about gardening,” Marsh laughs.

As the sun rose over the field, bright colors streaked across the sky. The morning dew sparkled, the birds chirped, and the foul odor of trash permeated the morning air. "This was almost the scene for some residents of Trotwood," explains Conservation Director Dave Nolan. "Back in fall of 2007, the city of Trotwood nearly lost 364 beautiful acres of land to a landfill. However, Five Rivers MetroParks was able to purchase the land in 2008, and that land is now The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank."

Recognizing the potential for this land, the Conservation Department at Five Rivers MetroParks plans to create more than 70 acres of new wetland and 200 acres of forest and prairie to enhance the ecosystem and create a new conservation area, as well as stimulate development and the local economy. How? The answer is in the bank.

The Clean Water Act of 1977 requires developers to restore a wetland in order to receive a permit allowing the developer to damage an existing wetland. High-quality wetlands are protected in Ohio, but low-quality wetlands can be impacted. "A wetland mitigation bank essentially is a large wetland that has been created, restored, enhanced or preserved in order to offset the costs of future conversions of wetland habitat for development," Nolan explains. "Wetland banking allows for 'credits' to be sold to qualified developers who have permits to develop land containing wetlands." Because the location of wetland banks can be predetermined and often are larger than other wetland mitigation projects, wetland banks are more effective mitigation projects.

The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank is nestled at the southeastern end of Sycamore State Park in Trotwood. While The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank is currently leased to farmers and managed as agricultural land, the funds received from selling credits will allow for the construction of the wetland, which is expected to kick off later this year. The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank will consist of a wetland...

area, a forested wetland area and a prairie. “The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank will also function as a future recreational area, which means it will become a beautiful park for you and your family to enjoy,” Nolan says.

Future plans involve the creation of hiking and walking trails. Construction of The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank will not be completed for several years; nevertheless, federal and state laws are already protecting the land, which means the land is prohibited from being anything other than a wetland.

Why are wetlands protected? “Wetlands are an important ecosystem that provides many key functions, such as biodiversity support, water quality improvement, flood abatement and carbon dioxide management. With the expansion of human populations, less than half of the world’s wetlands remain today,” Nolan says. According to a recent article in the scholarly journal “Annual Reviews of Environmental and Resources,” even though wetlands make up less than 3 percent of the planet, their contribution to the global annual renewable ecosystem services is as high as 40 percent. “As the area of wetlands decreases, so do wetlands’ ability to provide renewable ecosystem services,” says Wildlife Biologist Michael Enright. “This makes the restoration of wetlands all the more important. Because wetlands have nutrient-rich soil and offer a constant water source, plant species are highly productive and numerous animal species find refuge in wetlands. In fact, many species of birds, including ducks, woodpeckers, hawks, wading birds, and many songbirds can be found feeding and nesting in wetlands.”

Enright says wetlands are the “kidneys” of our ecosystem, able to hold enormous amounts of water that minimizing floods, and filter and cleanse the water that passes through them, improving local water quality. Wetlands are so efficient at removing contaminates and pollutants from water that some wetlands have even been used for waste-water treatment.

Currently, the Conservation Department at Five Rivers MetroParks is in the process of removing invasive plant species in The Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank. Invasive plants (such as amur honeysuckle) are plants that are not native to Ohio. These plants often spread aggressively and choke out native species, thereby decreasing biodiversity and altering the habitat. Honeysuckle removal took place from October through November last year, and soon removal of other invasive plant species will take place.

Once the invasive plant species are removed, the Great Miami Wetland Mitigation Bank can obtain approval to sell credits. When funding is acquired, phase I of the construction will begin. Phase I, which is expected to begin in late 2010, will consist of the construction of a forested wetland, a controlled succession area and a prairie area with small pothole wetlands. While the construction is likely to occur in late 2010, the wetland and prairie areas (phase II) will not be planted until 2011. Phase II will commence after phase I is complete and sufficient funds are received for the construction of Phase II. Until then, Phase II will continue to be used as agricultural land.
Located near the Belmont neighborhood, passers-by can observe the Woodman Fen Conservation Area, a 33-acre wetland restoration area owned and managed by Five Rivers MetroParks. What makes this wetland unique is its particular kind of muck. “A fen is a type of groundwater-fed wetland that remains wet year round,” explains Five Rivers MetroParks Wildlife Biologist Michael Enright. “Alkaline wetlands, like Woodman Fen, were once very common throughout southwestern Ohio; however, due to increases in development, relatively few remain today.”

In 2003, Five Rivers MetroParks purchased the Woodman Fen site, which was once converted into a vegetable farm, and began to restore the wetland. “The restoration process at Woodman Fen has been incredibly successful, and finally this fall, the restoration was completed,” Enright says. Montgomery County’s lone fen site has come a long way, and it took a lot of hard work to restore it to its natural state.

During spring 2009, more than 10,000 wetland plants were planted in Woodman Fen. All of the wetland plants here are native species that are unique to fens in southwest Ohio. “The results of these plantings were astonishing. Woodman Fen increased dramatically in its diversity of wetland plant species with only 30 species identified in 2007 to over 100 species currently identified,” Enright says. “Then during this past summer, we planted more than 6,000 prairie plants obtained from Cox Arboretum MetroPark in the prairie areas located between the forest and adjacent neighbors on the west side of the Fen. In the coming years, you will see lush fields of wildflowers as the prairie plants continue to grow.”

Public access to these conservation areas is another mission of the Conservation Department. But the Woodman Fen’s saturated alkaline soils make access difficult. “The majority of Woodman Fen is covered by up to six feet of black muck and peat,” Enright explains. Because peat is a soft and easily compressible substrate, dirt or gravel walking trails are not practical access routes through the wetland. Boardwalks on the other hand, offer a safe trail surface, allowing individuals to experience this rare ecosystem. The downside to boardwalks is they can be costly to build. Fortunately, the Conservation Department at Five Rivers MetroParks won funding to construct the boardwalk through the Walmart Foundation. “This money will help create a 1,200 linear foot boardwalk to be built through Woodman Fen,” Enright says. “Construction of the boardwalk is scheduled to begin soon, and a grand-opening ceremony will take place in April. The boardwalk will include three small observation decks were visitors will be able to view this stunning wetland. The boardwalk will also include a signage system that will mark points of interest and provide educational information regarding the plant and animal species that can be observed, and because the boardwalk will comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act, everyone will have the opportunity to experience this rare ecosystem.”

The Woodman Fen is located at 4820 Amesborough Road in Dayton. To get there, take Woodman Drive to Woodbine Avenue, turning west onto Woodbine. Then turn south onto Russet Avenue and east on Deborah Avenue. Finally, turn south on to Amesborough Road and continue until it dead ends into Newcastle Drive. There is no parking lot, but on-street parking is available. The entrance is at the north end of Newcastle Drive.
FANTASTIC PLASTIC!

GERMANTOWN METROPARK SHOWS OFF RECYCLED FURNISHINGS

Each year, millions of people visit Five Rivers MetroParks facilities, and after a day spent hiking, jogging, cycling, exploring or playing, those millions of visitors take a break by plopping down into a chair, bench or table. But after many years of hosting millions of picnics or comforting millions of tuckered patrons, the furniture becomes worn out and needs replaced. Quality furniture can be pricey, but by using various resources wisely, you can get the goods you need for less.

“We needed to replace some items, but with our budgets shrinking for the last five years, I had to find other ways to support the needs of Germantown MetroPark and the Nature Center,” says Assistant Park Manager Edgar Gerdeman, who landed grant money to replace some of the old, worn-out furniture. The grant, which was from the Montgomery County Solid Waste District (MCSWD), was used to purchase the amenities with an eco-friendly bonus: The furniture is made of recycled materials. “We're glad we found a way to update our amenities that saves money and the environment,” he says.

RECYCLED ITEMS INCLUDE:

- One 6-foot picnic table, of which 98 percent of the material used is recycled and post-consumer content. It will be used in the parking island associated with the Nature Center.

- One 7 1/2-foot ADA-approved picnic table made of approximately 4,400 milk jugs. This will be placed in a new overlook and ADA-approved picnic area along the accessible path leading to the Nature Center.

- Four chairs made from recycled milk containers. Two will be used indoors at the Nature Center wildlife observation area, and two will be used on the boardwalk overlook area near the Nature Center.

“Those chairs are earth-friendly in lots of ways,” explains Crystal Oksis, a sales representative and marketing specialist for Tailwind Furniture, the company that manufactured the Adirondack chairs. “We don’t cut down trees to make the chairs and, unlike wooden seating, these chairs do not need to be finished to painted, which cuts down on emissions. Plus recycled chairs won’t rot or splinter, reducing the need for maintenance. Finally, recycled furniture is easier for us to manufacture, so it’s cost-effective for all parties.” Oksis says about 10 milk jugs are recycled for every pound of a finished piece of furniture. The chairs at Germantown MetroPark and Nature Center equal roughly 1,800 milk containers saved from going in a landfill.

Organizations that support recycled product manufacturers not only save waste from taking up landfill space, they can send a message to the rest of the consumer world. “The benefit of a closed-loop system is that it guarantees a market for recyclable materials by maintaining a constant demand for the recycled products,” according Joe Fitzpatrick, MSCWD business program specialist, who says in the 10 years the grant program has been in existence, the MCSWD has helped supply recycled furniture to other local organizations, as well as outfitting local schools with recycled items, including playground equipment, tire mulch and even an outdoor science lab.

This isn’t the first time Five Rivers MetroParks and MCSWD have joined forces. Past partnerships include Twin Creek clean-ups, a voucher program for dumped tires in the parks, recycle containers placed in park facilities, the State Roadway Clean-up that also included Ohio Department of Transportation and Keep Ohio Beautiful, and programs such as Master Recycler Compost Kitchen.

Germantown MetroPark has submitted an additional grant for more recycled park amenities. Long-range consideration has been given to instituting a special area at the park only for recycled park amenities. “This area will highlight the longevity and durability of recycled goods,” Gerdeman says.

In an age of digital entertainment and virtual reality, it can be easy to overlook the value of unstructured play in a natural environment. In many ways, a video game cannot compare to the imaginative experience a child can have while digging in the dirt, holding a fuzzy caterpillar, splashing in a creek, or building a fort. “Over the years, research has shown that children are spending less time outside engaging in unstructured nature play than they have in the past,” says Five Rivers MetroParks Naturalist Joshua York. “Many studies attribute this to the increased availability of electronic entertainment and the increase in organized activities through ‘competitive parenting.’” These studies reveal children who spend their lives indoors are unable to cope with stressful situations. But there is good news: Research indicates children who play outdoors are more creative, confident and brave. “Unstructured outdoor play, or ‘nature play’ as we call it, is important for child development,” York says.

Two of the major roadblocks to kids getting healthy portions of nature play in their activity diets are resources and facilities. With 18 MetroParks open year-round, solving the latter dilemma was simple, but how can childcare providers get the resources they need? The solution: Five Rivers MetroParks created the Natural Adventures Box Program to help childcare facilities provide this type of learning experience. “This program allows for easier access to the outdoors and proper training for childcare providers on the subject of outdoor engagement,” York explains. Each lock box contains items children can use to explore the natural world around them, such as nets, containers to hold what was caught, a map of the park showing good spots for nature play, basic guides for facilitators to identify what the children catch in the nets, and surveys to be filled out each time a box was used.

Creative World of Childcare was selected for the Natural Adventures Box’s beta testing. “Their interest in child development and the provision of outdoor play experiences made them a wonderful group to work with,” York says. “Now that they have completed their Natural Adventures Box Program training, Creative World of Childcare is recognized by MetroParks as a center dedicated to providing their children with nature exploration experiences.”

The childcare instructors’ training session included information that will allow them to make the most of the children’s time at the parks. Once training was complete, the instructors obtained directions for reserving a box. Training sessions cover a variety of topics, such as:

- The location of the play boxes within the parks.
- The proper way to use all equipment provided in the box.
- How to engage the children in nature play and exploration.
- Tips for those who may not feel comfortable around some creatures. Important bits of advice include ways instructors won’t pass on their fears to children and teach them to handle the animals properly.
- What types of creatures they might encounter in creek environments.
- How to register to use the Natural Adventures Boxes.
- Games to play with children on trails.
Once the instructors were prepped, they got the code to the lock box and unleashed the children on the goods. The Nature Adventure Boxes found overwhelming approval from the childcare instructors. “The children responded to the boxes as if they were getting a gift just for them each time we went to a MetroPark and opened up the box,” one instructor wrote in a survey upon completing the program. “They would get excited to complete the park activity.” The children also expressed their mutual regards for the program. “We like the creek study the best because we got to catch stuff and play in the water,” according to the program survey. And one child’s most memorable moment? “While at the creek study I fell in the water when I saw a snake under a rock,” the survey stated. “I caught a crawfish, and when I touched it, I screamed and the teacher screamed, too.”

Silly remarks from the children aside, York says the beta test was a success. “Our goals for the Natural Adventures Boxes were to allow increased access to outdoor opportunities for childcare centers interested in promoting nature play and engagement with the outdoors, as well as provide a way for childcare centers to have access to the training and tools they would need to independently lead their own classes on a nature program in the MetroParks. This program also served to create awareness among childcare professionals about the importance of nature play,” he explains.

The next step for the Natural Adventures Box program is expansion. Plans this year call for opening the program to all Montgomery County childcare centers that wish to participate. “Parents should encourage their current childcare centers to participate in this program, or at least, provide more opportunities for nature engagement in general,” York suggests. Any childcare facility interested in participating in the program must attend a free training session to gain access to the boxes. Upcoming training dates include: 9 a.m. to noon May 22 at Sugarcreek MetroPark, 1 – 4 p.m. May 23 at the Germantown MetroPark Nature Center, and 9 a.m. to noon June 5 at Patty Shelter in Englewood MetroPark. “The only way to participate in this program is to complete one of these training sessions,” York says. “Only those present at the training will be authorized to reserve one of our Natural Adventures Box. That means a director cannot attend the meeting and then assign staff to use the boxes. This is to ensure each person who borrows a Natural Adventures Box will know how to use the materials safely and effectively, as well as make certain the children will get the most out of their experience.”

York says he hopes more childcare centers will participate in this program, but to a greater effect, he hopes the children who use the materials will encourage the rest of their family members to get outside and enjoy the MetroParks. “Kids love showing off what they’ve learned. They want to share this amazing experience they had in the park with people they love,” York says. “Maybe these Natural Adventures Boxes will be a sort of catalyst to get families outside and enjoy the MetroParks together.”

IT’S OUR NATURE.

(937) 275 PARK (7275)
METROPARKS.ORG
Spring has arrived, and with it comes green grass and trees, flowers in bloom – and baby animals! Spring is the typical season for baby animals born in the wild, and the farm at Possum Creek MetroPark also welcomes barnyard newborns. “May is a particularly good time to visit Possum Creek’s farm to see our new spring arrivals,” says Education Supervisor Vickie Benson. “Everyone is invited to visit the farm to see lambs, goat kids, chicks and bunnies as some of our newest farm residents.”

Animals can be viewed and petted anytime during the month, but the weekends offer a special opportunity. “The Kids’ Corral is a guaranteed way to see animals in the barn or holding pens for up-close viewing and petting purposes,” Benson says. “Kids’ Corral takes place every Saturday and Sunday from 1:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m. You can actually go into the holding area and interact with some of the farm animals.”

Kids’ Corral is a self-guided experience, but farm staff members will be on hand to answer any questions about the animals.

So who takes care of all these baby animals? “First and foremost, the farm baby’s mother is the number-one caretaker,” Benson explains. “The mother animals pass nourishment to their babies through the mother’s milk. Baby mammals need their mother’s milk to get important antibodies (proteins that fight infections and build the immune system), which are passed to the baby through the milk.

At about a couple of weeks of age, the babies begin to explore what the mature animals eat by nibbling on hay, grass and grain.

At Possum Creek MetroPark Farm, the only babies whose mothers are not the primary caretakers are the chicks. “Our chicks are hatched through the use of an incubator. Eggs are collected, and for 21 days, the eggs are kept warm, turned and have just the right humidity for a successful hatching,” Benson says. “Once the chicks hatch, they will dry off inside the incubator. They are then removed to an area set up as a brooder, and any additional supplements they may need.”

Children’s Discovery Garden

Designed as a child-friendly place to discover, experience and love our world through gardening, this special area contains habitats and whimsically themed gardens for children and their adult companions to explore together. Visitors are encouraged to attend frequently to see the gardens grow and change. Highlights include a limestone grotto and waterfall, music maze, wetland, pond and sensory garden. Be sure to visit Skeeter’s Garden, designed and cared for by local children and families during public programs. For more information, visit www.metroparks.org/childrensgarden which is an environment where heat, light, food and water are carefully controlled. The chicks must be kept warm at temperatures as high as 95 degrees for the first week, 90 degrees the following week and a drop of 5 degrees each following week until the chicks are fully feathered. Newly hatched chicks are fully capable of fending for themselves as far as getting food and water.”

All the animals at Possum Creek MetroPark Farm – babies and adults alike – have a very special diet to make sure they are happy and healthy. “Farm animals should never be fed ‘people’ food, nor should they be fed by hand,” Benson warns. “Food meant for human consumption is just that – for people, not for farm animals. We make sure that all the animals are getting the proper feeds and in the proper amounts. If you are interested in feeding, the animals ask the farm staff. Most of the time, we will let you have a chance to give the animals their food in the right amount and in the proper way. It is best not to feed animals by hand as the animals can pick up bad habits. Because farm animals can’t see under their noses, they have to use their lips and teeth to feel. Food being held in hands increases the risk of being accidentally bitten, so just let the staff members help you.” One such opportunity to feed the farm animals is during the “Family Farm Chores” program (see page 27).

Baby animals are interesting to observe. Watch how they interact with each other and with the other farm animals. “Baby animals do not have specific playtimes. They are spontaneous,” says Benson. “They become playful whenever and wherever the urge strikes - kind of like children. When they are in the Kids’ Corral, you might be able to catch them in a ‘game’ of ‘king/queen of the rock’ or sometimes they get what we call ‘happy feet’ where they run and spring around with all four feet off the ground at one time.” Play is an important learning process for the babies, just as it is for human children. Through play young animals develop coordination and learn social interactions and behaviors that prepare them for adult life.

But don’t think the only time you can see the babies is in May; the Kids’ Corral is year ‘round. “You can visit anytime throughout the year to see how the animals are growing and progressing and track what is going on with the animals,” Benson says.

Plus, there are lots of other great activities to do at Possum Creek MetroPark. Try exploring a variety of habitats found along the park’s 5 miles of wooded trails. Children also can enjoy the playground located next to the farm area, and have fun learning arithmetic skills at Polly Possum’s Math Farm. Another Possum Creek MetroPark activity is fishing. Visitors can fish without a license and free of charge at the ponds and Argonne Lake. There is a 10-inch minimum size on bass and a six-fish limit per day. The ponds are stocked on the first Friday of each month. During warm months, the ponds are stocked with catfish. There is also a first come-first served picnic shelter and covered porch area for small groups as well as a few individual picnic tables scattered around the farm grounds where snacks, lunch or a picnic can be enjoyed, in addition to the option of bringing a blanket to spread on the ground. Visit the barnyard babies and plan a whole day of family fun at Possum Creek MetroPark.
The Adventure Summit offers something for everyone.

If you’re looking for a reason to get off the sofa and get outside, you’re sure to discover a source of inspiration at The Adventure Summit. This annual event takes place at Wright State University’s Student Union, where the Summit blossomed out of WSU’s intramural sports day. “The Outdoor Recreation Department at Five Rivers MetroParks and Wright State University wanted to create an event that would inspire new enthusiasts and invigorate the growing local outdoor community,” explains MetroParks Outdoor Recreation Manager Brent Anslinger. “It was named ‘The Adventure Summit’ to reflect the event’s goal of celebrating the spirit of outdoor adventure by showcasing the vibrant lifestyle and culture of human-powered endeavors through inspiration, education and experience.”

This year’s Adventure Summit opens at 4 p.m. Friday, March 5, and concludes around 5 p.m. Saturday, March 6. Highlights include participatory activities, demonstrations, competitions, cultural activities and a litany of presentations and guest speakers. This year’s featured speaker is Charlie Engle, who turned from a life of addiction to one of fitness and adventure. Engle is best known for his historic run across 4,500 miles of the Sahara Desert.

The speaker lineup also includes Andy Skurka, who has racked up 30,000 miles of hiking, and Miami Valley native Jon Dorn, editor in chief of Backpacker magazine. Local adventurers also will host presentations, sharing their outdoor experiences. “This Summit is a chance for folks right here in Dayton to showcase their adventures,” Anslinger says. “It’s amazing to learn what our friends and neighbors have seen and done. We hope those in attendance will be inspired and reflect on that fact that it’s not just people you see on TV or eccentric millionaires who are having these great adventures, it’s people who live down the street, or one of the parents you might know from PTA, or one of your coworkers. Anyone can experience adventures, so why not you, too?”

The Adventure Summit bills itself as the area’s premier outdoor adventure exposition that provides something for everyone from the armchair adventurer to the hard-core enthusiast. True to word, not only can participants take part in outdoor adventures through exciting presentations, but for those who are up for a challenge, competitions are scheduled during the two-day event. Details and registration for the competitions can be found at www.metroparks.org/adventuresummit.

Individual and partner contests include:

- Kayak Challenge Pool Slalom Obstacle Course: Competitors will battle through a series of gates hanging in an “obstacle course” fashion. They will maneuver through five to six gates trying to go through them in the correct directions and without touching poles.
suspended from the ceiling as fast as possible.

Bouldering Competition: Competitors will test their bouldering skills in a variety of categories: youth, men's and women's in beginner, intermediate and advanced levels. This event draws participants from all over the Midwest and should be exciting to watch.

Indoor Triathlon: This event includes a 250-yard swim, a 6-mile bike and a 2-mile run/walk. There is a half hour for each category. Participants may register at local fitness retailer Up and Running or by phone at (937) 432-9210.

The expo area is another way Summit participants can engage in an active lifestyle. The expo is designed to provide the visitor a chance to mingle with local, regional and national outdoor-related exhibitors. A variety of outdoor clubs, specialty retail shops, outfitters and resorts are regular exhibitors at the Summit. Once you’ve been inspired about an activity in the presentations, check out the associated exhibitor in the expo.

Other features of The Adventure Summit include an outdoor art gallery, live music, beer tastings and “Party with the Pros,” where you can hang out with other outdoor enthusiasts as well as the stars of The Adventure Summit in a casual atmosphere while watching adventure videos. And the price of this weekend packed with inspiration, recreation and active lifestyles? It’s free. There are no fees for admission or parking. Learn more about the event by visiting the Web site www.metroparks.org/adventuresummit.

“If you got a bad case of cabin fever, be sure to stop by The Adventure Summit. You’ve got nothing to lose and everything to gain,” Anslinger says. “Come out and see why people are calling Dayton, Ohio, the ‘Outdoor Adventure Capital of the Midwest!’”

From the historical significance of the Wright Brothers to the upcoming downtown hub, cycling has always played a prominent role in the Miami Valley. “By now, most residents in this region either have ridden the recreational trails or greenway paths, or at least know where one is in their neighborhood,” says Andy Williamson, assistant outdoor recreation manager for Five Rivers MetroParks Outdoor Recreation Department. “But many are not aware of the plethora of organizations, group rides, infrastructural development and activities devoted to cycling that are going on in the region.”

For the last 25 years, the region has invested much to create one of the most extensive greenway/recreation trail systems in the country. Many organizations, communities and clubs are working hard to connect this bicycle highway to local and regional destinations. “This will incorporate cycling into the culture of the Miami Valley, as well as broaden access to transportation and foster active, healthy lifestyles,” Williamson says.

Southwest Ohio has more than 325 miles of paved trail; 238 of those miles are connected trail, according to the Miami Valley Regional Planning Commission (MVRPC), another organization that helped develop the vast greenway. The connected trails link Dayton with Xenia, Springfield, London, Franklin, Urbana, Lebanon and eastern Cincinnati, which helps stimulate small businesses, as most trails pass through downtown areas and historic districts rather than the retail and hospitality chains that sprawl along interstates and highways. “A recent trail user survey found that trail use is directly related to over $13 million of economic activity in the Miami Valley,” explains Matthew Lindsay, environmental planning manager for MVRPC. “That includes equipment purchases, food and beverage sales and overnight accommodations for those coming from out of town to experience our trails.”

Williamson concurs with the economic findings: “Cycling is infiltrating all ends of the region and may become, along with other outdoor recreation activities, a key to the revitalization of our community.” Future trail developments are planned to connect Dayton with Troy, Piqua, Jamestown, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base and Middletown.

But cycling in this region has grown to become more than a recreational activity. More and more people are using the greenway to commute. “If you haven’t been downtown lately and seen the Phase III RiverScape project, be sure to check it out,” Williamson says. “One component of the project is a Bike Hub, which will provide showers and storage, making commuting to work more accessible for cyclists.” In addition to the hub, slated for completion in 2010, the city of Dayton has incorporated the first phase of the on-road bike lanes on Jefferson Street. “This is part of the two-way conversion project in which many of Dayton’s downtown streets will be converted from one-way to two-way,” says Joe Weinel, a senior engineer with Dayton’s public works department. More lanes will be installed on St. Clair Street going southbound from Monument Avenue to 5th Street, and a shared-lane marking, or “sharrow,” will be installed on 4th and 5th streets going from St. Clair to the river. “We’re trying to develop a livable city. That means accessibility for cars as well as bikes and pedestrians,” Weinel says. “We want to make it as easy as possible to get around downtown.”

Bridge construction that closed sections of the Great Miami River Trail has been completed, making downtown Dayton further accessible by bike. “Currently, less than half a percent of Miami Valley residents bike to work, but that number has real potential to grow as the trail system grows and as our streets and roads get more bike-friendly,” Lindsay says. “Individuals can pocket real savings from using their cars less, and they’ll become healthier at the same time.”
Anyone who has ever been interested in commuting by bike will have the opportunity to join other cyclists on Friday, May 21. "To celebrate National Bike to Work Month, Five Rivers MetroParks and the Drive Less, Live More campaign will host the Bike to Work Day Pancake Breakfast," Williamson says. "Head to the National City 2nd Street Market at the corner of Second and Webster streets and enjoy a hearty breakfast while mingling with fellow cycling enthusiasts. We want to show people how easy and fun it can be to commute to work via bike."

Because of the increased bike usage in the region, a variety of interest groups sprouted to fill the social aspect of cycling, lending a true sense of community to riders. "It's so great to be a cyclist in this region because of the variety of activities, events and programs held throughout the year," Williamson says. "Organizations such as the Dayton Cycling Club, Major Taylor Cycling Club, Miami Valley Mountain Bike Association and Five Rivers MetroParks provide rides all over the area, nearly every day of the week."

One such group is Courteous Mass Dayton, a group designed to get riders on the streets of downtown Dayton. "The goal of Courteous Mass is to educate and inform cyclists and motorist that cyclists have the right to the road, and cyclists should follow all traffic laws just as if driving their car," Williamson explains. "The Courteous Mass Dayton rides are typically held the first Friday of every month at 5:30 p.m."

Another unique cycling-oriented group is bike polo. That's right - a modified version of hockey on bicycles. "The local Hard Court Bike Polo Team is nationally recognized as being one of the top groups in the country," Williamson says. "Check them out sometime. Matches take place at the former roller hockey rink at Walnut Hill Park in Dayton."

For whatever the reason, transportation or recreation, be sure to capitalize on the vast network of trails, greenways and bike paths stretched across the region. They are all great ways to "get out and live."

Spring in the MetroParks is a time of renewal. After enduring a harsh winter, life returns to the Miami Valley. Once-bare tree branches are fuzzy with new leaves. Flowers reach up from the soil to receive the sun. Hibernating animals emerge from their dark burrows and migrating birds resume their favorite Ohio roosts. Local residents also imitate their wildlife neighbors. “You can almost taste the excitement as cabin fever culminates in February and then that first peek at warm temperatures in March – people are ready to get outside,” says Five Rivers MetroParks Executive Director Charlie Shoemaker. “To me, there’s nothing like that first spring walk you can take through the parks when it’s warm enough outside that you don’t have to bundle up. The air has a sweet smell and it’s not so brisk. Those are some of the best parts about the MetroParks in the spring.”

There are lots of great ways to get outside and enjoy the spring. Read on for highlights throughout the all Five Rivers MetroParks. And if your thumbs are green or if those first pops of color across the landscape raise your pulse a few beats, chances are you can’t wait for your first chance to plunge your spade into the ground. You won’t want to miss our special gardening bonus in this feature.

GET GROWING

Warmer days signal the start of the growing season for flowers and some vegetables. This bonus gardening section will help you get your yard in gear for the growing season. Can’t get enough? Flip to page 28 for upcoming gardening programs. Whether you’re looking for expert advice to take your skills to the next level, or are just in search of a social experience where you can pick up a few techniques in the company of good friends, there’s a MetroParks gardening program for you.

SELECTING THE RIGHT PLANT:

- Before you buy plants, you should make a sun map of your property. Find out how many hours of sun you get for each part of your yard and whether it’s morning or afternoon sun. Make the map in early spring (before leaves are on the trees) and again in summer when the leaves are full. Next, look at the plants you want to buy and find out what its light requirements are: “FULL SUN” means eight or more hours a day, “PART SUN” is four to six hours, “PART SHADE” means two to four hours of sun, and “FULL SHADE” plants need less than two hours or sunlight.

- Determine whether your planting area has wet or dry soil. You will probably have at least some of both types in your yard. Look for low-lying areas that might collect water versus locations that dry out easily to find out whether your soil is wet or dry. Select appropriate plants for each soil type/location. If you have that information, you’ll find the perfect place for the plant you want.

PREPARING THE SOIL:

- Most plants do best in rich, well-drained soil. What we have in Dayton is neither rich nor well-drained, but rocky and full of clay. Healthy soil has spaces for water, air, roots and worms.

- Add organic matter—compost, leaves—to the soil to keep it light and make it full of nutrients so plants will grow well. Check your city offices to see whether they have a compost program, as many communities that collect yard debris convert it into healthy compost.

- Over-tilling will destroy the structure of soil, so go easy with the roto-tiller and rely more on incorporating organic matter.

- Healthy plants generally do not attract disease or insects.

- Once you have your plants in the ground, fertilize them with organic fertilizer when planting and during the growing season.

BEST PRACTICES FOR DEVELOPING YOUR GARDEN OR LANDSCAPE:

- Read and research before you plant anything. You want to know the specific needs of the plant, whether you are growing it from seed, planting a flat from the garden center, or putting in a large tree or shrub.

- If you are starting seeds indoors, follow directions as to depth and planting medium (type of soil). Pay careful attention to how many days the plant will take to go from germination to maturity. You don’t want to start the seed too early or too late. Generally, seeds should go into the ground by May 15, or the last day that frost threatens.

- If you are planting seed outdoors, follow instructions as to depth and planting method.

- Most plants, from seedlings all the way to trees and shrubs, want to be planted so the juncture of the plant and the roots is just below the soil line. Putting them too deep or too shallow will give the plants problems.

- When planting, add a bit of compost to the soil you removed from the hole and backfill after your plant is in. Be sure to water it well.

- Spring flowering bulbs should be planted at the recommended depth in late fall/early winter. Plant them too deeply and they won’t come up until late in the season, if at all.

PRUNING TIPS:

- Most plants, whether annuals, perennials, shrubs or trees can benefit from correct pruning. Just snipping off dead and sickly blossoms or leaves can make your plant healthier and allow you to enjoy it all season.

- You can prune shrubs and bushes for correct shape and height and to create fuller foliage and more blooms.

- Pruning can help rid plants of disease and some insects.
- When trimming a few fresh flowers to brighten up your home, don’t take away more than a third of the plant at any one time.
- Don’t over-prune. Trying to make a plant smaller than its natural size. Most plants need to attain a specific height before they will mature. Over-pruning could deprive you of your plant’s full beauty.

These basic tips will help get your garden growing. To develop your skills, consider attending some upcoming programs and events, such as the Miami Valley Gardening Conference that’s set for March 6. Whether you’re a novice or a Master Gardener, you’ll get great tips and information at this event. This year’s featured guest is Roger Swain, the personality behind Public Broadcast Service’s popular “Victory Garden.”
